'IT'S GOING TO BE COOL'

Construction continues on the building overlooking the Missouri River that will be the new home to North Dakota's Gateway to Science. The 43,000-square-foot building is adjacent to the MDU Resources Community Bowl on the campus of Bismarck State College. It's expected to be finished late this year. Gateway to Science Marketing Director Judy Sauter said the building will feature a hands-on exhibit gallery, an education wing and a maker space, plus views of Mandan and the Missouri River Valley. Gateway to Science staff and members of the board of directors had a tour of the construction last week. "It was fun to go inside for the first time," Sauter said. "It's going to be cool."
